

Analysis Shows That Israel Has Attacked Gaza Nearly Every Day Since the October Ceasefire and Killed More Than 460 Civilians

A recent analysis of news reports conducted by Al Jazeera has demonstrated the extent to which Israel has repeatedly violated the October 2025 ceasefire agreement in Gaza. Since this went into effect back on October 10th of last year, Israel has initiated near-daily military attacks in Gaza which have consisted of airstrikes, direct shootings against civilians, ground incursions, and property demolitions. During this time, more than 460 have been killed, with nearly 1,300 more injured. Additionally, humanitarian aid has continued to be heavily restricted. Despite the agreement stipulating that at least 600 aid trucks be allowed to enter the territory daily, only a daily average of between 150-250 have been actually permitted in the first three months – equating to a mere 25% to 41% of the agreed upon amount. Yet again this week, Israeli forces also struck and killed multiple journalists in an attack on their clearly marked press vehicle in central Gaza. Even prior to this latest occurrence, press organizations had already documented how the war in Gaza had become the deadliest conflict ever for journalists – with at least 270 being killed. All told, international monitoring groups have documented close to 1,250 Israeli violations of the ceasefire agreement over the past few months since its implementation.

An in-depth look at Israel’s military attacks over the course of the full calendar of days since the beginning of the ceasefire shows just how recurrent the almost daily violations have been. In the 103 days between October 10th, 2025 (the day that the ceasefire went into effect) and earlier this week on January 20th, 2026, Israel was found to have carried out attacks in Gaza on an appalling 88 of these days. Thus, the evidence highlights that only an alarming 15 days during this close to three-and-a-half-month period have been free from violent attacks, killings, injuries, and continued displacement of civilians. Despite the repeated attacks, the United States maintains that the ceasefire is holding – even as belligerent Israeli military activity persists on the ground. As such, the Trump administration has faced significant levels of criticism for its failure to hold Israel accountable for the aforementioned at least 1,250 Israeli violations of the ceasefire since October. Observers have outlined how the administration’s “blind spot” regarding continued Israeli military attacks and clear evidence of noncompliance is undermining the very peace plan that it brokered. Rights groups contend that the refusal to pressure Israel has led to a catastrophic shortfall in aid, with the levels of this failing to even reach 50% of what was stipulated as a part of the ceasefire agreement. Furthermore, the Trump administration has been criticized for going so far as to publicly defend destructive and controversial Israeli actions – such as its targeted assassinations of Hamas officials after the implementation of the Gaza ceasefire agreement. Instead, as has been pointed out, Trump officials should be denouncing these and other violations as blatant breaches of the truce that risk a return to full-scale conflict.

The continued Israeli ceasefire violations and lack of accountability for these by the Trump administration come as the latter also faces substantial criticism for its “Board of Peace” (BoP) initiative in Gaza. Various countries, including many strong traditional U.S. allies, have expressed concern that the board seeks to bypass established international institutions like the United Nations and lacks a neutral monitoring mechanism to address ongoing violations. This has resulted in nations like France, Norway, and Sweden declining to join the initiative, while others have yet to commit or relayed serious reservations. In fact, the calls for an independent global monitoring mechanism as an essential component of phase two of the Gaza plan in light of repeated Israeli ceasefire violations have intensified in recent weeks, with entities calling for a neutral body to oversee the ceasefire and delivery of humanitarian aid in order to prevent further breaches. Without this in place, the ceasefire will remain extremely fragile and prone to the constant potential of complete collapse.

Those concerned with the BoP plans in Gaza and the ongoing circumstances surrounding them have sought to draw attention to the major challenges that they fail to address, which threaten the sustainability of the ceasefire agreement and any prospect of transition to long-term stability. Most troubling, the initiative is seeking to transition to the outlined second phase of the Gaza plan despite a failure to fully and properly implement and enforce phase one – given the clear evidence of repeated Israeli ceasefire violations and continued obstruction of humanitarian aid. On top of this, the BoP lacks neutrality and independence, with the board’s leadership consisting heavily of Trump loyalists and allies including U.S. Secretary of State Marco Rubio, Trump’s son-in-law Jared Kushner, and special envoy Steve Witkoff. There is also widespread apprehension that the board undermines core principles of multilateralism and international law, and in doing so, disregards the fundamental rules of the United Nations Charter by creating a rival diplomatic body. Lastly, and of additional grave unease, is the ignoring of the escalating unlawful Israeli actions in the occupied West Bank – an issue of vital importance for any purported initiative aimed at bringing about lasting peace and stability.
